EMPLOYMENT LAWSCENE ALERT: SUPREME COURT DECIDES RELIGIOUS ACCOMMODATION CASE

Today, the U.S. Supreme Court issued its ruling in EEOC v. Abercrombie and Fitch. Justice Scalia penned the majority opinion while Justice Alito wrote a concurrence and Justice Thomas concurred in part and dissented in part. The case, which centered around whether employers can be held liable for failing to accommodate a religious practice only after the applicant or employee has informed the employer of the need for an accommodation, was covered by our blog in January. The facts that brought the case to the Supreme Court are that a Muslim job applicant wore a head scarf to her job interview, but because the retailer's Look Policy stated that employees could not wear "caps," she was not hired. The retailer argued, and the Tenth Circuit agreed, that it was the applicant's duty to inform the employer that she was wearing the headscarf for a religious reason and would, therefore, need an accommodation from their policy, which she did not do. The Supreme Court reversed, stating that an applicant would only need to show that the need for a religious accommodation was a motivating factor in the employment decision to prevail.

The Supreme Court drew a distinction between an employer having "actual knowledge" of a need for a religious accommodation and having that need be a "motivating factor" in the employment decision. An employer cannot refuse to hire an applicant based on a desire to avoid providing an accommodation, even if they're only guessing that an accommodation would be necessary. The Supreme Court based this on Title VII's "because of" language, which means a motivating factor, not actual knowledge. Title VII, unlike other antidiscrimination statutes like the Americans with Disabilities Act, does not impose a knowledge requirement. The Court found this important in deciding that it is the employer's motive that is the essential factor in proving discrimination under Title VII. Although the Court stated that adding a knowledge requirement would be adding words to the law, which is the duty of Congress, not the courts, it did acknowledge that the employer's knowledge may make it easier to infer motive as it would be difficult to prove that motive unless an employee can prove that the employer at least suspects that the practice is a religious practice.

The rule that the Supreme Court came out with, and employers should take care to follow is “An employer may not make an applicant’s religious practice, confirmed or otherwise, a factor in employment decisions.” Additionally, the Court stated that Title VII requires employers to give accommodations from otherwise neutral policies to employees for religious reasons. Therefore, employers cannot take religious beliefs that they either know or suspect exist into account when making employment decisions, and they must accommodate religious beliefs unless such an accommodation would impose an undue hardship.

EMPLOYMENT LAWSCENE ALERT: ARE TRANSGENDER EMPLOYEES PROTECTED UNDER THE LAW?

In April 2015, the EEOC also settled one of the first cases in which it attempted to litigate that transgender discrimination is protected under Title VII. The EEOC filed an amicus brief in a previous case claiming that sex discrimination includes discrimination against those who do not conform to gender stereotypes and, therefore, would include transgender individuals who are either physically male and gender-identify as female or are physically female and gender-identify as male. In March, the U.S. Department of Justice also sued Southeastern Oklahoma State University and the Regional University System of Oklahoma for denying tenure to and eventually terminating an employee because of her gender identity. Although none of these cases have received decisions on the merits of the case, the EEOC has made its position clear, and employers need to take stock of their policies or prepare for litigation.

These and other cases that have been filed raise interesting and challenging questions for employers. Gender expression is not specifically covered under Title VII, but that doesn’t necessarily mean that transgender employees can’t be covered by the statute. The two Circuit Courts of Appeals that have addressed the issue, the Sixth and the Eleventh, have held that a transgender plaintiff can state a claim for sex bias if the defendant took an adverse action against them because the worker-plaintiff didn’t conform to a sex stereotype or norm. However, this does not mean that the law is settled, and district courts across the country may be faced with interpreting the law in these cases sooner rather than later. Employers should also make sure to take state law into account.

With the backing of the EEOC, discrimination suits by transgender employees could be a rising trend that employers should be aware of. Employers should review their policies and practices as they relate to discrimination and harassment and take complaints of harassment and discrimination of any kind seriously and investigate them thoroughly.

EMPLOYMENT LAWSCENE ALERT: CONTINUED EMPLOYMENT IS RULED VALID CONSIDERATION FOR NON-COMPETES IN WISCONSIN

On April 30, 2015, the Supreme Court of Wisconsin issued its long-awaited decision in Runzheimer International Ltd. v. Friedlen, in which it came to the conclusion that the promise of continued at-will employment is valid consideration for a restrictive covenant.

In Runzheimer, the employee had worked for his employer for fifteen years when the employer required all employees to sign restrictive covenants or be terminated. The employee signed the restrictive covenant, but after he was terminated more than two years later, he went to work for a competitor in breach of that agreement, and the employer sued. The employee then claimed that the agreement was invalid because it lacked consideration.

In Wisconsin, forbearance in exercising a legal right is valid consideration. The Court reasoned that, because Wisconsin is an employment at-will state, companies have a legal right to terminate employees at any time for a good reason, a bad reason, or no reason at all, as long as it does not violate existing law or public policy. Therefore, giving up the legal right to terminate an employee at that moment in exchange for the employee signing a covenant not to compete is valid consideration.

The court emphasized that its holding in Runzheimer is consistent with its 1994 holding in NBZ, Inc. v. Pilarski where the Wisconsin Supreme Court held that the promise of continued employment did not provide sufficient consideration to support a restrictive covenant entered into by an existing employee. The Wisconsin Supreme Court distinguished its holding in NBZ by finding that, in that case, the employee's employment had not been conditioned upon her signature and the employer did not promise to do anything else in exchange. Without these elements, there can be no consideration to support enforcement of the agreement under Wisconsin law.

Therefore, under the Wisconsin Supreme Court's holding in Runzheimer, in order for continued at-will employment to be valid consideration for a restrictive covenant agreement, employers must condition the employee's continued employment upon the employee actually signing the agreement. In order to maintain that position in any action that might challenge the issue of consideration, an employer must actually terminate any employee who refuses to sign the restrictive covenant for it to validly assert that continued employment was conditioned upon the employee's signature to the agreement.

Wisconsin has now joined the majority of jurisdictions, which hold that a promise to continue an at-will employee's employment is lawful consideration for a restrictive covenant. The Runzheimer decision now permits Wisconsin employers to require their existing employees to sign new or modified restrictive covenant agreements without promising employees anything more than continued at-will employment.
